Meet Jade, Fairfax County's Comprehensive Mapping Application

Jade was designed to provide the public with never-before released map layers, reports, exclusive aerial imagery, and analytical tools to explore County data and business processes. Jade is one of many county efforts to democratize open data through powerful, yet intuitive, interfaces.

There are over 170 map layers to explore, including property information, land development, public facilities, infrastructure, environmental, and more.

Detailed property reports describing legal and environmental conditions are especially useful for land development activities. To meet this need, Jade users will be able to create reports for every property in Fairfax County:

- A general parcel report uses the most current County data to display information on a property's description, zoning, structures, ownership, and tax/assessments.
- A separate environmental parcel report includes information on watersheds, floodplains, resource protection areas, and soil details.

Users can then capture their efforts in Jade by exporting created images and maps. They may also share their work via email and social media.

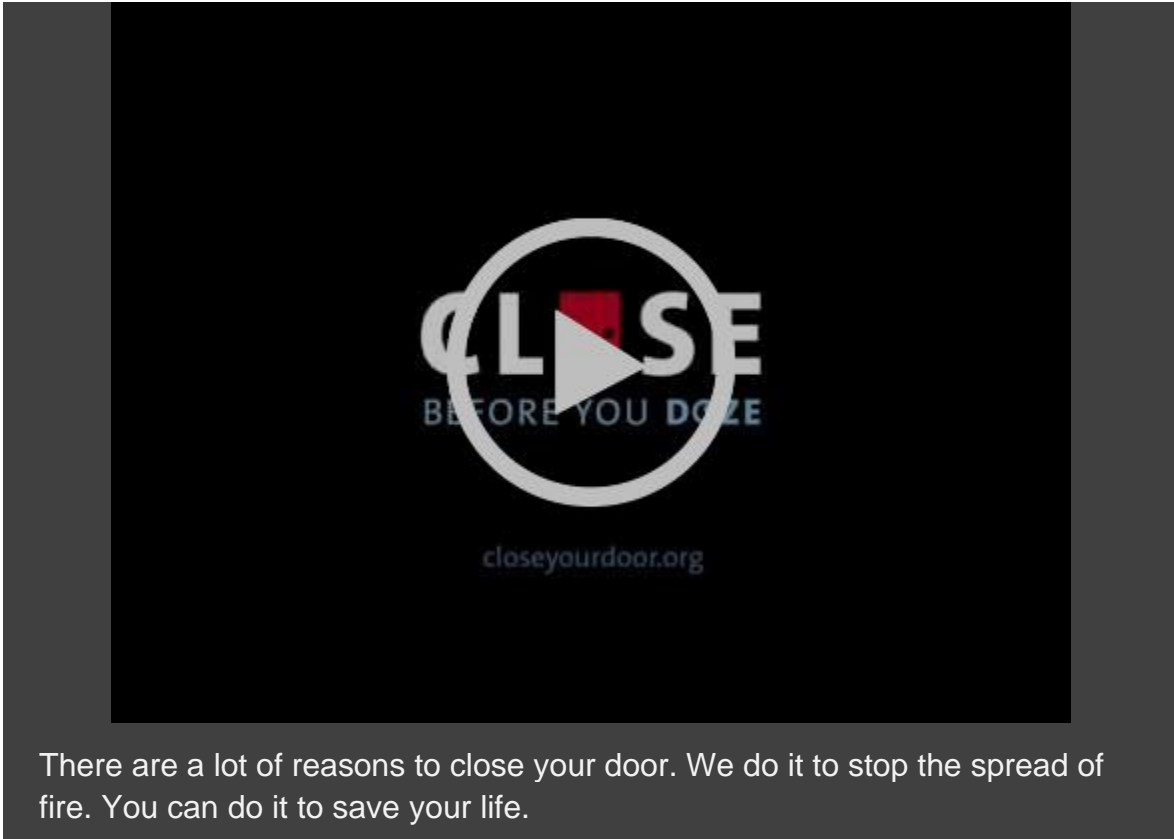

For the first time, Fairfax County is making its library of oblique aerial imagery available to the public. Users can virtually move around any location in Fairfax County with side-views from each cardinal direction. Furthermore, there are 14 years of aerial imagery, ranging from 1937 to present.

Video: Close Before You Doze

Check Your Trees for the Asian Longhorned Beetle

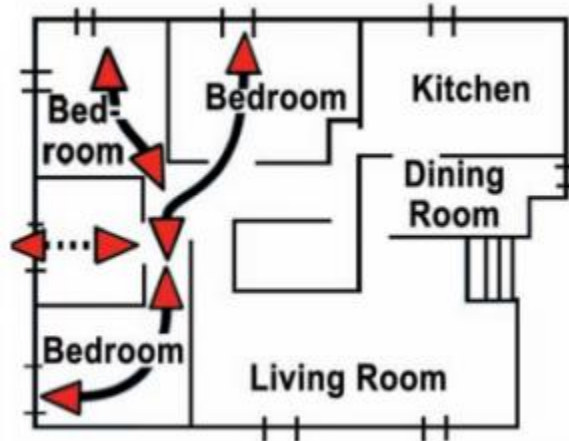

The Asian longhorned beetle is one of the most serious and destructive tree pests to strike North America. So far, this insect has been found in the New York City metropolitan area, Chicago, two locations in New Jersey, Toronto, and most recently, in Worcester, Massachusetts.

Asian longhorned beetles to date have not been found in Fairfax County. A native of China, this wood boring insect was most likely introduced into this country through packing crates. Like many invasive insects, it has no natural enemies to keep its populations in control. Asian longhorned beetles have the potential to destroy millions of acres of hardwood forests as well as residential landscape trees. Due to the beetle's destructive power, Fairfax County foresters are on the look out for it. If you have seen this beetle (pictured above) or have possibly seen damage caused by it, please contact the Forest Pest Branch at 703-324-5304, TTY 711, or via email.
